Parent's Corner:

Stay in the shade

Because UV rays are the strongest between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., either stay indoors during this time or play in the shade. If your kids do go outside during this time, be sure to apply sunscreen about 30 minutes prior to heading out; sunscreen does not start working the instant you apply it to skin. Because UV rays still get through the clouds and damage skin on overcast days, make it a rule that if your kids are outside, they will wear sunscreen. If they are swimming or sweating a lot, reapply it.
